

Willingham 2020-2021 Research Fellowship Information for Applicants

The Willingham Fellowship is intended to give Williams students in this moment of potential transformation the opportunity to pursue a semester-long (fall or spring) independent student research project on race and inequality. The Fellowship, open to any Williams student, comes with a stipend of $1,700 for an inquiry that is meaningful to a student and conducted outside of formal coursework. Although the work is not for course credit, it will be conducted in conversation with a faculty sponsor from the Political Science Department. In assessing applications, we will consider the quality of the proposal, the interest and significance of the topic, and the academic record or promise of the applicant.

Fellowship Requirements:

- A semester long research project of your own design on race and inequality.
- Roughly 8 hours per week of work on the project.
- Regular contact with your faculty advisor.
- Completion of the final project. In approaching a potential advisor and drafting your application you should think about how you want to tie your work together and what completion entails. The project may, but need not, culminate in a paper. It might instead end with some kind of public or multi-media presentation, a podcast, an annotated resource guide, an article for the Record or other publication, etc.

Please complete and submit all application questions using the Google Form by 5:00 p.m. on August 17.

If you have any questions regarding the process or fellowship, please contact Mark Reinhardt, chair of the Political Science Department, at mrein@williams.edu.
